SOVIET UNION

"The Marshals Speak Up Again in the Kremlin," The Economist, May 3, 1969

The article discusses the role of the military in Soviet political leadership circles. In a brief and readable form, it advances some assumptions concerning the conditions and limitations on the political role that can be played by Soviet military leaders.

INDIA

"Non-Proliferation: Factors that India Must Weigh," Asian Review, April 1969, by Ashok Kapur, an Indian journalist and political scientist who is a frequent contributor to Asian journals on nuclear and other national security policy questions facing India. He is a strong advocate of the "nuclear option" for India on security (anti-Chinese) grounds.

GREECE

"For the Return of Democracy to Greece: A Realistic Approach," from Notes on World Events, May 1969, the monthly publication of the Chicago Council on Foreign Relations.

The author is George Kousoulas, chairman of the Department of Government at Howard University, but more importantly, a consultant to the Greek military regime who participated in the drafting of the new Greek constitution. Kousoulas presents a reasoned argument for encouraging the military regime toward gradual return to constitutional government. The author makes no bones about expressing open support for the return to democracy but recommends working with the regime to that end rather than against it.
